Besides serial stories, Continuous stories, lively sketches, poems and pictures for the holidays, and scores of fine illustrations of the best sort, with drawings by Japanese artists, the Christmas Holiday Number of St Nicholas, superbly illustrated, contains a very impressive article, by Lucy Larcom, with pictures, on

THE BOYS OF MY BOYHOOD, by William Cullen Bryant.

THE LONDON LITERARY WORLD says:

"There is no magazine for the young that can be made to equal the exquisite production of Scribner's press. The London Daily News says: "We believe we could point out its equal in our own periodical literature."

GEN. GRANT IN LONDON.

THE RECEPTION AT MINISTER PIERREPONT'S.

[Dave Logan's report in N. Y. Herald.]

We find ourselves in St. James', and at last the carriage turns into the great quadrangle of Cavendish square, with its well-kept patch of verdure in the center and towering mansions on the four sides. All this is dimly seen now, for the night has wrapped the square in shadows, save where ruby gleams of subdued brightness stream through the closely-drawn scarlet silk curtains of the grand old mansion wherein dwells Minister Pierrepont. There is a line of carriages before the door, each quickly depositing its load of beauty and distinction and driving away. A solid framework has been built over the pavement, supporting an awning. The entire pathway is covered with scarlet carpet. A number of deferential link-boys, wearing scarlet tunics, move about opening carriage doors and turning on the light of their eyes, or square, red lighted lanterns, so that not any foot in satin shoon should make a false step. Beyond, in the street, and lining the portal on each side as closely as the special policemen on duty would allow, are to seen in groups detachments of England's poor and hungry to get a glimpse of the jaunty lord wherein dwelle honor, beauty, high birth and distinction, won by sword, pen, or people. We have to we passing but a glance, alas, for those in the street, with the officious policeman pushing them back into the darkness beyond, but I can hear one ask an officer as he recedes, "Which is Grant?" "Generally granted," was the answer. "Wide stood the lacquered doors, inside of which, rangedon either side of the hallway, stood statuesquely or bowed obsequiously, to welcome and direct the guests, a gorgeous array of footmen in liveries of bone and gold, and showing in silken hose these wondrous calves of which poor Thackeray laughed, and whose fair proportions whim and Leech so often depicted in Punch. The second glance at entering the doors brings to the eye a beautiful vista of rich colors, and to the sense the perfumes of a thousand flowers—flowers everywhere, from ground to roof, peeping in clusters of bril

DIRIGO.

[From the Boston Traveller.]

The voice of Maine is still heard above the clamor of the time-servers. The Republicans of that State adopted a Republican platform and nominated Republicans for office. They turned not to the right nor to the left, but kept straight ahead in the path of duty. To the threats of the professional reformers and the divine-right bolters they said, We will assert our convictions, believing in their power for success, but we will assert them if defeat stand in our way; it is better to be defeated for the truth than to deny it and win. And the Republicans of Maine have confirmed their sagacity no less than their consistency by handsomely increasing their last off-year majority.

When the fall campaign began, it was strenuously urged by the policy organs, that the only salvation for the Republican party was to abandon Republican principles, and take a new departure into an untried field. They doomed to defeat every party ticket that stood upon a platform ignoring the policy, and they decried as an indication of weakness every effort to preserve Republican principles. Ohio was overcome by their threats and by its personal admiration for the favorite son President. Iowa and Maine stood up against the madness of surrender, and proclaimed the principles they never had forgotten to maintain with their votes. The first one of these three conspicuous examples has given practical evidence of its good judgment and earnestness. It has elected a Governor who is a prominent exponent of advanced Republican principles, upon a platform which maintains that this Government was preserved for the protection of its loyal citizens first of all. It has defeated by an unusual majority a Democratic candidate who specially commended himself as an adviser of the President's policy. In a season of general demoralization and apathy, it has carried the standard as high as in the best days of the Republican party.

The moral of this result will enforce itself. The Republicans of this country cannot fail to see it. The party which stood to its principles and its leaders arises from the general uncertainty to a conspicuous triumph, the party which went outside its ranks for a standard-bearer of changeable views, gets down by an emphatic vote of want of confidence. The story has been illustrated before, but never more forcibly. No party can prevail by casting out its principles and its leaders. The Maine Republicans have proved their quality by their work, and it behooves others to follow their example. There is strength in convictions deeply rooted.

[From the Concord Monitor.]

The Republican victory in Maine will carry joy to the hearts of the friends of honest government everywhere. The vote is a light one in the aggregate, but the results gain relatively for the Republicans. No one need mistake the significance of this triumph. It has been achieved by a faithful adherence to the principles and methods of the Republican party irrespective of the policies of the "ists" or the "ionts," and as such it will be accepted by the people. Maine Republicanism is of the stalwart order, and cannot be moved from its firm base by any of the miserable devices of compromising and temporizing clique and coterie. Let the lesson be heeded elsewhere. Meanthne, all honor to the Republicans of the Pine Tree State!

BABY WARFARE.

On Monday shortly after the closing of the polls a despatch was sent to the Associated Press giving the result of the election in this city which appeared correctly in the Boston Post of Tuesday as follows:

BANGOR, Me., Sept. 10. The election here to-day was very quiet, and the vote was very light. The Democrats were so much divided that the Republicans deemed it unnecessary to make any effort. The total vote was 1315, of which Conror received 1011, Williams 172, Manson 243, Talbot 86. Connor's majority over Williams 842, over all, 515. All the Republican Representatives were elected.

In the Boston Journal office, however, the news does not seem to have been welcome, and the whole substance of the dispatch giving the vote of Bangor was cut out, so that only the following matter was printed in the Journal:

BANGOR, Me., Sept. 10. The election here to-day was very quiet, and the vote was very light. The Democrats were so much divided that the Republicans deemed it unnecessary to make any effort. All the Republican Representatives were elected.

Now the Journal may not be pleased that Bangor gave so large a majority, but attempting to suppress the fact is not very dignified warfare and only injures itself. The news will be published, and if the Journal cuts and trims it to suit its politics, the public will seek and find it elsewhere. We can stand that sort of warfare of the Journal can.

NOTES OF MOURNING.

The Boston Globe has heard the news from Maine and "still it is not happy." Its chagrin and spite because the Republicans have doubled their last off-year majority in this State without vindicating the Globe, finds each ¢ in numerous splittering squibs distributed through its editorial columns of Wednesday. The following samples show the, irrepressible character of its grief:

The result of the Maine election seems to please 'em all, which is very funny.

—Carry the news to Boston," shouts Boutelle Pasha. We beg to acknowledge the arrival of the messenger and the delivery of the package.

A delegate to the Maine Republican State Convention voted the Democratic ticket Monday.

An enthusiastic Bourbon in Portland voted for Marcellus Emery. Boutelle is jealous.

The Kennebec Journal Mr. Blaine's home organ, is as noisy over the result of the election as if it had been a great and surprising victory. It shouts that "the result is glorious," and it applauds Mr. Blaine's management in extravagant fashion. The article was evidently written early on the afternoon of election day.

The BANGOR WHIG AND COURIER is the only paper that has reached us yet decorated with the emblems of victory. It exhibits its three flags and two specimens of the bird of freedom. The retired field piece which has done duty on former occasions is not visible. The editor is ungenerous enough to omit offering thanks to Marcellus Emery for valuable aid rendered during the campaign.

Captain Boutelle turns on the light and demonstrates that the victory means this and nothing less: "It declares that Maine knows no wavering in her devotion to Republican principles, and that the banner which she has so gloriously borne through twenty-two successive battles will not be lowered an inch while there is wrong to be redressed and right to be vindicated and maintained."

OUR TWENTY-SECOND VICTORY.

[From the Kennebec Journal.]

The Republicans of Maine won their twenty-second consecutive victory yesterday. They might have done better, but did well for the off-year. The result is all that was expected by the most sanguine Republicans. We have routed the enemy, horse, foot and dragoons. We have again elected the gallant Selden Connor, Governor of the State, by a majority over the Democratic candidate of not less than ten thousand, have carried every county in the State but Lincoln and Knox, have elected twenty-nine Senators, and at least three-fourths of the members elected to the Legislature are Republicans.

The greenback ticket received some 3000 votes, which were drawn from both the Republican and Democratic parties, but counting this vote against Connor he will still have a majority over all competitors of from 6,000 to 8,000,—a majority double that which he received at his first election in 1875.

The result is glorious. It will inspire Republicans everywhere with courage and zeal to maintain their organization. It will strengthen us for future conflicts. A few malcontents and grumblers have left the party, but they will do us less injury as avowed Democrats than they did while professed Republicans and yet secretly in alliance and in sympathy with our enemies.

The campaign of the part of the Republicans was managed admirably. No mistakes were made. The right attitude was assumed by the state Convention. This set the nineteenth consecutive victory, which the party has won under the leadership of Mr. Blaine as Chairman of the Republican State Committee. His prowess as a party leader has been displayed in many gallantly fought fields in Maine. The Republican party has never known defeat under him. It never followed him with more confidence in his skillfulness and sagacity than at the present time.

To those who have been anxious to hear from Maine we send greeting. We have fought a good fight in Maine. May Ohio, Massachusetts and New York do as well in their approaching elections.

[From the Portland Press.]

The Republicans of Maine achieved yesterday a good, substantial off-year victory. The majority of Gov. Connor is larger than he had two years ago and his plurality over Williams is much larger. Of course nobody expects such a majority in an off-year as is thrown under impulse of a Presidential election, and the Democrats were hopeful of reducing the majority below that of 1875, or even of extinguishing it altogether. They talked of the great inroads which Williams would make in the Republican ranks and of the great popular uprising against Blaine! But as usual they were too sanguine. The Republicans have a way of taking their ease and indulging their private fancies in the way of voting on the years when neither Congressmen nor President are to be chosen; being careful, however, to throw a few more votes than the Democrats can possibly muster. So they tantalize the old adversary by showing him a victory near at hand, but provokingly just out of reach; but they are good party men at heart all the while as abundantly appears when any emergency requires a strict drawing of the line.

The stock of Democratic hopefulness is something marvellous; and they came up gallantly smiling this year to their twenty-first consecutive defeat with all the sprightliness of sanguine youth pervading their battered old frames. This time they have got a few county officers here and there, and some extra representatives in the Legislature, which to-day however, is largely Republican in both branches. On the whole, it was a very good, day's work for our side and shows that the Republican party is practically as strong and united in Maine as it was before "the policy" was ever dreamed of. We send greeting to our brethren in other States. We are in very good political health and hope you will follow the same sound hygienic methods which we have found so efficacious.

THE PENOBSCOT DELEGATION.

The complete list of Representatives to the Legislature elect, in Penobscot County is as follows:

Republicans.

Bangor—Alexander, Strickland, Henry Lord, John E. Cutler.
Orrington—Charles D. Chapman.
Levant—John White.

Democrats.

Burlington—Thomas W. Porter.
Glenburn—C. A. Morrill.
Veazie—Wyatt Wheel, reported by three maj.

A ROUSING MAJORITY.

To the Editor of the Whig and Courier.

I notice that your paper of the 12th imputes the majority of Cyrus A. Hanson, Esq., of Lee, for Representative, at 100, but the returns more than double that figure. Last year William Shaw of Kingman, was chosen to the Legislature by the Republicans. This year his son Walter, who only came of age last Spring, was nominated by the Democrats. The Republicans nominated Mr. Hanson, a citizen of standing, and the result is as follows:

MAJORITIES FOR HANSON!

Lee, a Democratic town,	67
Mattawamkeag, Democratic town,	8
Springfield,	57
Winn,	5
Drew Plant,	6
Prentiss,	32
Webster plantation,	2
Aggregate,	175
MAJORITIES FOR SHAW.
Kingman,	25
Lakeville,	2
Carroll,	5
Aggregate,	32

The gives Mr. Hanson a clear majority of 208, which I think is better than the Dist ever has done before. W. O.

GRAPESHOT.

[From the Boston Traveller.]

—"The Heart Bowed Down With Weight of Woe," will be in order from Artful Dodger Schurz when he hears from Maine.

—The narrow-gauge divine-right bolters would do well to spend a quiet hourin reflection over the returns from Maine. "There's millions in it."

—We observe with pain that the Advertiser and the Journal don't enjoy the Maine election as usual. They wanted the off-year majority reduced so that they might point to it and say, "I told you so." The news is bad for skulkers.

—The Post's editorial writers were too much exhausted last night to wait for the news from Maine, or perhaps they forgot to say anything about it. It wasn't a very interesting subject from the Democratic observatory.

—The poor old Advertiser pends tearfully that the Maine election has no significance with relation to National politics. Ah, ha! But suppose the Maine Republicans had won upon a policy platform, or had been beaten as it is? In either event, the Advertiser would have seen nothing in the result but National politics. There's such a thing as consistency, but some organs don't find it handy.

Before our "policy" contemporaries abroad derive too much comfort in asserting that although the Maine Republicans have largely increased their last off-year majority, there has been a serious falling off in the total vote of off-years, we beg to remind them of the facts. The returns already reported foot up nearly 95,000. The total vote in the off-years next preceding Presidential elections has been as follows: In 1873—80,953; in 1869—95,082; in 1865—80,073. In 1874 it was 93,300. From 80,073 in 1865 we raised it to 131,782 in 1868 and from 80,953 in 1873 we raised it to 130,823 in 1876. Will they please note that Maine Republicans always have votes enough for the occasion.

The Providence Journal says: "The attempted reunion of Federal and Confederate soldiers at Marietta was a failure. A number of Confederate Generals were announced to take part in the proceedings, but none of them appeared, and the highest in rank of their side was a Major. The recent success of the Democratic party have made the rebel leaders reluctant to fraternize with their old enemies. They look forward to the time when it shall be a reproach to have served in the Union army and an honor to have fought with the rebels. The Union of a solid South with the frauds and corruption of New York city, and its overflow into New Jersey and Connecticut, has carried one branch of Congress, and threatens the other, and the rebels feel their old arrogance and their old contempt for the North, the other portions of which they use, while despising the instruments of their political success."

"It will be heard," says the New York Tribune, "with much surprise and no little regret, that the attempted reunion of Federal and Confederate soldiers at Marietta was a failure so far as participation of Confederates was concerned. Instead of the hundreds who were looked for, barely a score registered, and, instead of the Generals who were so plenty in the Southern armies, the highest rank represented was that of major. This was such an excellent opportunity of evidencing, in a striking way, the return of national good-will, that it seems unfortunate that the distinguished representatives of the Lost Cause, whose presence was looked for, could not have come to shake hands with their old foes."

The Boston Globe says: "A delegate to the Maine Republican Convention voted the Democratic ticket Monday." If he is proud of it he should give his name. It might not possibly be any one of those policy gentlemen who were so loud in professions of their solicitude for the success of the Republican party. Who was he? A high-toned bolter should not be a sneak!

The Boston Herald's Ohio correspondent says that the President's visit to Ohio is carefully timed as to its effects on the campaign, and that it has already had an effect in placating Democrats, even if it has not satisfied the disgruntled Republicans. We don't think it is quite fair for a reform correspondent to say such things about the President.—Lowell Courier.

"Stalwart Republican triumph" is what the BANGOR WHIG calls it, Mr. Hayes.—Boston Post.

No need to trouble yourself, Mr. Post, the WHIG is taken regularly at the White House.

California cheerfully indorsed the policy; Maine didn't. California was heavily carried by the Democrats; Maine has solidly Republican as ever. As Mrs. Partington says: "You can draw your own references."

Senator Bayard, who made that Calhoun States rights speech in Cambridge, a short time since, and whose Bourbonism is warranted to wash, has fully and handsomely indorsed the policy.—Boston Traveller.

The Springfield special of the Boston Herald says not over one Republican in twenty in Massachusetts approves of Hayes's "Southern policy."

MASSACHUSETTS

The Prohibitory State Convention

WORCESTER, Sept 12 The State Convention of the Prohibitory party was called to order at 11 25 this morning by W H Baker of Boston, chairman of the State Committee About 700 delegates were present including 100 ladies A temporary organization was effected by the choice of Alonzo L Lathrop of Taunton, chairman and Charles A Hovey of Southboro and W Brown of Chelsea secretaries After appointing committees for the honorary and the time for talk about political platforms and tactics for the coming campaign on circulating a permanent organization here than adjourned

The Permanent Organization

Being in charge of Rev George H Vose of Boston the convention called the delegates who pretend to be prohibitists and then voted for Guy Bond of Springfield a moderate drinker The committee on credentials reported for temporary officers Rev D C Bell, of Hyde Park President Rev George Hoyt of Lowell Secretary of Marblehead Wm Mason of Worcester, Geo B Emerson of Newton Henry Haskell of Merrimack Robert Melrose Rev George A Bickford of South Abington and a list of vice presidents by counties were accepted

Rev Dr Eddy's Address

Rev Dr Eddy was received with applause He remarked We have met to nominate a state ticket which if it could be elected would remove from our midst a party that is stepping everything that is dear to good humanity A party that is ostracized by both political parties It is composed of men who have come to the conclusion that it is useless to reason with Massachusetts from the train now upon her The liquor traffic is regulated by law and votes not to decide whether we shall have it or not but will honor the State by that we shall have a Governor like Governor Briggs John I Baker or R C Pitman, or like one who bows to the will of the liquor traffic We have tried both the old parties and have gained nothing We have only 12,000 votes thus far but in four 25,000 in a few years and with the balance of power in our hands we can then elect officers in the State

He said in the Boston papers this morning that they were going to abandon the prohibitists because the Republicans propose to give a little sop at them but believed he spoke the sentiment of the prohibitionists when he said, "No, never" (Applause) The flag of prohibition will not touch the staff, but will be waved over the State until the state is redeemed from the curse of the liquor traffic"

A committee on resolutions and finance were then appointed A committee to report nominations during recess for members of the State central committee, was also appointed. At 1 o clock a recess until 2 was taken.

The Afternoon Session

The Convention was again called to order at 2 o clock.

The committee on credentials reported that 144 towns and wards of cities were represented by 613 delegates

Rev O D Sargent addressed the convention in regard to the different candidates in the field. He said he knew Baker but needed information about the others

It was moved that a discussion be entered upon as to the merits of candidates, each to be limited to five minutes—Adopted

Mr Shannon of Lowell represented the name of John A Stott of Lowell

Mr Powers of Lowell endorsed Mr Stott.

Mr H D Cushing stated that Mayor Stott would withdraw his name if Mr. Baker was nominated by the Republican party

Mr Howland of Stoughton presented the name of Elijah A Morse of Canton, against whom he said, not a word could be said

Mr Edmund Cullen, of East Boston, said John J Baker stood high in his estimation but he would propose the name of Wendell Phillips Rev. Mr. Vibbert said he had voted for Wendell Phillips several times but he now nominated Judge Robert C Pitman, of Newton, for Governor.

The time for discussion having expired, Rev O D Sargent moved that the convention proceed to

An Informal Ballot

Carried, which was carried A committee of nine was chosen to collect and count the ballots. Mr. Howland withdrew the name of Mr. Morse in favor of Judge Pitman. (Cheers.) The Lowell delegation withdrew the name of Mr. Stott in favor of Judge Pitman. (Cheers.) Mr Berry of Lynn announced that he had just seen Mr. Baker and that gentleman wished his name withdrawn in favor of Judge Pitman. (Applause.) An appeal was made for money to carry on the campaign, and contributions were made aggregating about $1000. The informal ballot resulted as follows

Benjamin F. Butler,	1
M F. Gilburn,	1
Elijah Morse,	1
Thomas Talbot,	13
Charles A Stott,	5
Wendell Phillips,	20
Robert C Pitman	524

Three cheers for Mr. Pitman were given, and Rev Mr. Vibbert moved the nomination of Mr Pitman by acclamation, which was carried with but one voice dissenting.

Judge Pitman's Acceptance

Judge Pitman was escorted to the platform and received with cheers. He said it would be strange if he was insensible to this mark of approval. He had said last evening that a man must make a sacrifice in this work but he had little idea that he would be called upon to make the sacrifice He would do so, however and accept the nomination, (applause) and he would never withdraw in this campaign, no matter what other nominations might be made. He hoped they would all make sacrifices that the vote for the principles might be large in every town as possible, feeling confident that the triumph was not far distant.—(Cheers)

LONDON, Sept 13. The following Russian bulletin effectually dispose of the wild stories about the capture of Plevna:

RUSSIAN HEADQUARTERS,
Poredin, Sept. 10—10.40 A. M.

Our batteries cannonaded Plevna all day Sunday. The Turks made a considerable sortie against our left wing, but were repulsed, losing heavily. The Romanians made a bold reconnoissance of the enemy's redoubts which opened heavy fire, but were silenced by the concentrated fire from our batteries. The position of one of our siege batteries was changed Sunday evening to enable it to cannonade the fortified Turkish encampment. Heavy cannonading continued throughout the night and increased in extent and activity from 5 this morning. All is quiet at other points at the seat of war. At the capture of Lovatz we took two Turkish standards and a quantity of arms and ammunition. We buried 2200 Turkish dead, a large number of them were sabred by our cavalry. During the pursuit our loss was 1000.

Sept. 11—5 30 A. M. Our siege batteries cannonaded Plevna all day Monday and until late in the night. The left wing under Skobeleff captured another of the neighboring heights which will enable us to bombard the enemy's positions and the town of Plevna itself. The enemy opposed Skobeleff very feebly. Our cavalry on the Sophia road has defeated a detachment of Circassians from Plevna Our losses to the present time are insignificant

A NARROW ESCAPE. As a young girl was pushing a child in a perambulator along Garland street yesterday afternoon, a calf which some person had tethered by a long rope, apparently to feed on the grass by the sidewalk, suddenly ran across the walk at full speed and such force that the rope tripped up the young girl and flung her heavily to the ground, at the same time tipping over the carriage and throwing the child violently out. Fortunately the attendant was not seriously hurt, and the child almost miraculously escaped with a slight bruise on the cheek. The carelessness of whoever left such an animal on a public walk is deserving of an efficient rebuke, and some one should look after such violations of the city ordinance

THE AUTUMN LEAF PARTY will go for a considerable distance very near Mount Webster, which forms one side of the Notch. The following from Oakes White Mountain Scenery will be read with great interest

"Willey Mountain is the highest but its summit is not seen from below, and although gloomy and grand, with its high bulgings and steep sides, it is less striking than Mt Webster, which is among the most unique and magnificent objects of the White Mountains. This vast and regular mass arises abruptly from the plain below, to the height of 2 000 feet; its shape is that of a high fort with steep scarped sides, its immense front apparently wholly inaccessible. Its top, nearly horizontal and rough with precipitous crags, juts over with heavy and frowning brows So mightily a mountain wall, so high, so wide so vast and so near the spectator that all its grand proportions are seen with the utmost distinctness, it fills at once the mind with awe, admiration and delight"

Mr Fairbanks will go through with the party and attend to all details The low rate should induce a large number to accompany the train Persons on the line of the E & N A Railway who wish to join the party can have tickets to and from Bangor for one fare

A SPLENDID SHIP

The New Ship L J Morse—Her Construction Fittings and her Builders.

We had a pleasure recently of visiting the splendid new ship "Llewellyn F Morse" built by Jos Ogden & Son of Brewer, and commanded by Captain Amos, and were much impressed by the thoroughness of her construction and the many improvements adopted in her fittings. The hull is mostly built of heavy timber with unusually ponderous breast-hooks and pointers, and throughout the fastenings seem a complete and solid mass of wood and metal can be made Every stage of the construction has been rigidly supervised by Capt Ames and the work has all been done in the best manner The outside finish is very fine and the deck work especially so, the planking on the quarter deck being done like a cabinet work The ship is furnished with numerous modern improvements, including a steam engine built by Kendall & Roberts, of Cambridgeport Mass, which is used not only for loading and discharging but is also connected with winch heads for warping, hoisting sails etc and by a connection with patent power capstan on the forecastle which works the Emerson Patent Windlass, easily raises the anchor without the assistance of one man besides the engineer It is also geared to connect with Russell's improved patent pumps so that the ship may be freed from water at any time by the tireless power of steam and an engineer is attached capable of furnishing than dance of fresh water The ship is provided in addition with a large iron vertical tank and a number of deck butts to hold an ample supply of water for use The patent capstan is from Glen Hyde's foundry in Bath

The standing rigging is of galvanized wire and has been very handsomely fitted by the riggers Hennessy & Angley of the city The spars are well proportioned with double topsail yards and fine royal trusses The manila running rigging was furnished from the rope walk of Sewall, Day & Co, Boston

The cabins are entered through an elegant passing way at the front of the body which is a handsome stairway leads to the companion way with doors on each side leading to the forward or fitting cabin which finds its finish in natural wood Beyond this is the first cabin, or saloon finished in ash polished wood and handsomely furnished Recesses on each side are fitted with sofas in carlet plush, and the floor carpeted with linoleum A door leads to the quarter deck near the wheel house and on one side is a toilet room and lavatory and on the other the captain's state room The latter is unusually roomy and comfortable The bed stead is quite a curio, it is of modern design in black walnut and is hung upon pivots with a heavy weight enclosed under the frame, so that it will preserve its equilibrium however much the vessel may roll or rock This arrangement was made under the directions of Capt Ames and persons familiar with the discomforts of ordinary berths at sea, will appreciate the improvement

The contractors for this fine vessel were Messrs Joseph Ogden & Son, Brewer, and Joel Perkins was Master workman The joiner work was done by S L Howes, the blacksmithing by C M Deane and M. Eldridge the painting by Shaw & Eldridge and the caulking by John H Hall. The ship is a fine specimen of marine handicraft and will be a credit to her building port wherever she goes The ship is principally owned in this city.

Capt. Ames expects to sail to-day for Liverpool, the ship being now anchored at Fort Point He will leave his family here, and in wishing him Bon Voyage we hope that success will attend him and his noble craft

UNITARIAN CONFERENCE

Wednesday's Proceedings—Election of Officers—Essays and Discussions Etc

Yesterday morning at a little before nine o'clock the Unitarian Conference assembled at the church. From nine until ten o'clock a devotional meeting was held, conducted by Rev. C. A. Curtis, of Augusta. The exercises were as follows, Singing the 43d hymn, reading the scriptures from the 6th chapter of Matthew prayer by Rev. Mr. Curtis, followed by singing the 600th hymn. After prayer and remarks from several gentlemen the meeting was closed by singing the 722d hymn. The Conference then took a recess of about five minutes

Shortly after ten o'clock a business meeting was held, Rev. D. N. Sheldon, of Waterville, presiding. The Recording Secretary, Rev. C. C. Vinal, of Kennebunk, then read the minutes of the last meeting; also the Treasurer's report, both of which were accepted A committee of three was then appointed by the chair to report a list of officers for the ensuing year. A committee of three were also appointed by the chair to draw up resolutions of respect, on the death of the late Rev. Dr. Wheeler. The chairman of the Missionary Committee then made a short report, after which he asked that the Conference at the opening of the afternoon session would discuss the matter of appointing a missionary secretary to travel through the State and look after the wants of the different churches.

The committee to nominate the officers for the ensuing year, made the following report, which was accepted:

President, F. A. Wilson, Bangor; Vice-President, Rev. D. N. Sheldon, Waterville; Recording Secretary, Rev. C. C. Vinal, Kennebunk; Treasurer, Mark P. Emery, Portland; Executive Committee, Rev. J. T. G Nichols, Portland, F. M. Sabine, Bangor, J D. Hopkins, Belfast, Committee on Missions, Rev. J. H. Bixby, Belfast, T. L. Hersey, Portland, Rev. O W. Buck, Portland, Committee on Ways and Means, Joseph Dane, Kennebunk, Samuel Titcomb, Augusta, and I. O. Farrington, Portland It was then found that there were one hundred and thirty five delegates present at the Conference.

At the close of the business meeting Rev Mr. Bixby, of Belfast, read a very interesting essay on the subject "The need of the Church in Modern Society" dwelling particularly on the fact that the members should be united, for in union there is strength Discussion followed by Revs Mr. Bellows, Edward E Hale and R R Shaffron all of whom made some very interesting remarks After prayer by Rev. Mr Nichols the Conference adjourned to Unity Hall

At one o clock a splendid collation was served in Unity Hall which was handsomely decorated with flags and flowers After the collation short speeches were made by Revs Dr. Bellows and E E Hale, and Mr Stoddard

In the afternoon the meeting was called to order at about three o'clock by Rev Mr Sheldon Short reports of the standing of the churches in Augusta and Farmington were then made by Revs. Mr Curtis and Mr Hayes.

Rev M Vinal then said that the question before the meeting was, What shall we do with the money? Shall we distribute it among the churches, or shall we support a secretary to travel through the State and look after the wants of the churches

Rev Mr Knapp moved that the matter should be referred to the Executive Committee who should act in conjunction with the Missionary Committee, and report at the opening of this morning's session.

Rev Dr Bellows then spoke at some length in favor of having a missionary secretary going here and there exploding the false dogmas and circulating instructive literature He was followed by Rev Mr Shaffron who spoke at some length in relation to the Church Creed.

Rev Clay McCauley, of Washington, then read a very able essay on "What think ye of Christ" and the discussion which followed was participated in by Revs Bellows and Sheldon The Conference then adjourned until evening

At about eight o clock in the evening the exercises opened with prayer by Rev. Mr Nichols, followed with singing by the choir, after which Rev Mr Nichols read a portion of the scriptures and offered prayer, followed by a solo by Mrs Crowell

Rev Edward E Hale then delivered a sermon from the text, Acts 2 4—"And they were filled with the Holy Ghost" The sermon was most eloquent and scholarly effort and was highly appreciated by the immense audience present At the close of the sermon Communion service was held.

INCORRIGIBLE.

A STORY IN TWO CHAPTERS.

He had energy and courage and perseverance enough to set up a whole firm of city merchants, but the tide of luck seemed against him.

His mother, broken-hearted by the loss the husband who had been the centre and mainspring of her life, had a long and dangerous illness. We all know the expenses that a severe sickness entails, and the family finances had to be stretched to the utmost, and, even then, no amount of pulling would make both ends meet.

Then that year was a bad one in the mercantile world; several large concerns "went" for vast sums, and sprangled lesser figures of commerce in their ever-gulfs, as a sinking steamer sucks into the depths below any small craft in its vicinity.

Under these circumstances "getting on" was about as up-hill work as could well be conceived, and I almost think Edgar would have lost heart altogether at times, if it hadn't been for the cheery little woman who greeted him with such a loving smile on that golden evening that came round once a week.

You must understand that Edgar was never asked to break bread in the big house at Kensington, and marry or arbitrary gale was that Kate never visited his "people." As Mrs. Stewart was wont to term his family. Truth to tell, the Birkleys were not the only old friends that John Stewart had had to give up just for peace and a quiet life in the domestic tent, and his daughter Kate, as averse to wrangling as he had been—for the present. When she was Edgar's wife, his people would be her people.

"It hurts my feelings to see Miss Kate's young man treated as if he was dirt under their feet' so it does," said a tender-hearted woman to the cook of the Kensington establishment.

"I mean a deal of things done in this world that don't please that potentate," was the reply; "and I never believe in some people's ways being pattered in the client tomb," is remark that met with unanimous approbation in the kitchen conclave.

But though yielding in many ways, Kate was incorrigible on one particular.

She would make no engagements for that one evening in the week, when for two happy hours Edgar was all her own.

"It's Bliss and Life, and Strength to me, to know you are waiting for me here," I said to her once, when things were looking very black, indeed.

Perhaps another woman in her place would have suspected, and said expectantly that she was aware that it was anything of the kind.

But that was not Kate's way.

She had looked up at him with her grave, tender eyes, and said "I know it all, while in her heart, she registered a vow that never, come what might, should that might add life, and strength," he lack-ing.

When that "season" was drawing to a close, there came an evening when she put back the dark locks from her lover's forehead, and after a long look into his face, gave a heavy sigh, as she said:

"I'm afraid, Gar, you forget your promise sometimes, dear?"

What can I do? I'm answered, crushing her in his arms.

Yes, that's just it! What could he do?

By giving up even one week's relaxation to her, by taking other men's work upon his own shoulders—by going early to business, and staying late, for I'm sorry sometimes Gar, he would have liked to tell his darling of—he hoped to climb into a certain post that was expected to be vacant by the end of the year. Then he would rest!

"You look, Gar, so like a weary boy!" said Kate as he left her that night.

"I am always tired, more or less—generally, more," he answered, smiling, on "must be your know, just when there comes a pull upon you, but the end will come some day, and then my darling, no one shall take you from me.

I linger upon the record of this one evening, you see, Kate sat beside her lover's knee and listened to the story of his hopes and fears, entering into even the smallest detail of his plans—only a loving, helpful woman can do. But 10 came all too soon, and Edgar rose to go. "Good-night my own!" he said very tenderly, and holding her close—close in his arms.

He was standing just under the hanging lamp in the middle of the room, and Kate thought she had never seen him look so worn, and wan, and haggard. She threw her arms about his neck, and told a mother-like love heart fashion.

"Yes, yes! your very own!" she sobbed in the pass on and sorrow of the moment. "remember that, always, and, oh, love! take care of yourself, because I am your own, and because my heart would break if I lost you!"

"Dear heart!" he murmured, very softly with his lips on hers.

"My need not be at this [illegible] and I'll so you would have plenty of time to dress after Mr. Birley is gone," said Maud to her sister. Now, it is One in the afternoon, and when she was want in pure kate's heart, this calling the tired plaything Mr. Birley.

"Well if you wish it so much, dear, I will go, she said, unable to repress a little sarcasm, the arrow went home.

"Poor Maud! Neth ruffle is going with me," said Mrs. Stewart, pettingly, from the depths of a luxurious cushion.

"I am glad of that," put in the elder sister, "the pleasantest and most disinclined to go you know mamma—though he is a lion!" Mrs. Stewart and Maud exchanged a glance.

The evening of the social dance, as evenings are apt to do whether we want them or not, and Kate's dress, all pure white and light as sea-foam, repose in state upon her bed.

"I want everything to be quite ready for me to put on, so I shall not leave much time to dress," she had said to her maid. And that damsel fully entered into the reason why" of this caution, and acted promptly upon her young lady's orders. And thus with all toilet cares dismissed from her mind, she went down to the morning room to wait for Edgar's coming.

"I think this moments lagged" how slowly the clock beat out each minute. She had said very little to him about it in her customary weekly letter to him, but the fact was Kate had had an anxious time of it in these few days past. There had been something in Edgar's face when she saw him last that suggested that most uncomfortable of all fears—breaking down.

Now, we most of us know what it is to see these signs in the face we love; a look as though the strain has been too long continued, and though the courage still holds good, the physical powers are running low. Then there had been no answer to her letters, a rare thing that. Well, the lamplighter had gone his rounds, and all down the wide street the lamps glimmered palely in the summer gloaming. Last night Kate had watched him at his talk, and said to herself

"When he comes this time to-morrow, it will mean that Gar is coming. And as the long sonorous bell of the church hard by had rung out eight deep notes, she had thought "To-morrow, when I hear it, it will say to me that he is coming—coming—coming." But "to-morrow was here now, and 8 o'clock had gone long ago, and yet Edgar did not come. The tender-hearted footman, coming in to see if she would take some coffee, knew well the weary watch that she was keeping, and in his sympathy he found himself listening "with all his ears," as he afterward told the cook, for "Mr. Hedgar's knock." Alas for the poor little, wistful face at the window, that knock never came!

Meanwhile, above stairs, Mrs. Stewart and Maud were holding solemn council of war, and in her hand the former held a letter addressed, in somewhat uncertain calligraphy, to "Miss Kate Stewart." She held it very much as she might have been expected to hold a live serpent, had such a creature penetrated to the sacred precincts of her dressing-room.

"A boy brought it," said Maud, "and I happened to be coming in at the time; it is Jessie Birley's writing, and so I thought it best to keep it till you woke from your doze. Depend upon it, it's some silly message that will keep Kate from going with us to-night."

"My own impression is that that young man has heard of dear Lord Paul's attentions to Kate; and there is some underhand work going on in consequence."

"I shouldn't wonder," said Maud, spitefully; "and how provoking, too, if she won't go to-night, after your telling Lord Paul she was sure to be there, and that speech of his about introducing us all to his aunt, Lady Pierrepoint."

"I think this letter will keep till morning," said Mrs. Stewart, after a long and effective silence. So they put it on the oddment-shelf, and for the greater safety told a letter-weight bigger than itself upon the top of it. Half an hour later Maud put her head, all beautifully dressed and adorned with dew-spangled lilies, into the room where that sad-eyed girl still kept fruitless vigil.

"Mr. Birley will never come at this time of night, Kate. What is the use of your waiting? You'd better come up stairs and dress, or you'll be sure to keep us at the last.

"Oh dear!—must I go?" said Kate wearily.

"Well, you know you promised, and mamma will be disappointed, and so will Mrs. Delaney; besides I set my heart on his going to this affair together." So there was nothing else for it.

"I never saw Kate look to such disadvantage!" whispered Mrs. Stewart in Maud's ear, as the group entered Mrs. Delaney's drawing-room.

Now the group included Lord Paul, by-the-way, and he seemed to see no fault in Kate's looks! Yet there is some truth in what her stepmother says. The poor little lass is "pale as her sprig," and the spotless robe that is gathered up to her slender throat, makes her look like a lily of a snowdrop. At least so thinks Lord Paul Netherclife. You see it was the very first time in their three years of betrothal that Edgar had failed to keep tryst with his dear love!

Toward midnight Mrs. Delaney's poodle began to whimper. That is to say, you began to find it difficult to move about, and occasionally had to stand with your arm pinned down to your side, as Effie were a brace of roasted chicken. So Kate, attended by Lord Paul, sought refuge out a broad landing where groups of flowering plants and lightly-burning colored lamps made quite a little fairyland. As they gladly lingered in this cool, balmy atmosphere, and while Kate was thinking longingly of her quiet room at home, and in imagination welcoming to Gar to know what had kept him from her side at the appointed hour, two men standing in the doorway near which she was seated began to talk of something that had happened that afternoon in the city. The poor fellow looked like death, said one, and the crowd pelted and as a London crowd always does, abominably, enough to do so that we could hardly get him up from the pavement. Fortunately, Tressham, of St Bartholomew's was with us, and saying the case to be a dedicated bad one—heart or something of that kind—he grew peremptory, and got the fellow into a cab and Fleetham, you know, John
